PREFACE

MANOR OF WENSLEYDALE.

I am indebted to my cousin, Mr. W. H. Willan, for permission to print the Survey of Wensleydale, which is the property of Messrs. Willan and Metcalfe, Solicitors, Hawes, and to my brother, Mr. J. J. Willan, for permission to consult the Broderick valuation which is in his custody as Clerk to the Aysgarth Rural District Council.

While this work was in the press Mr. C. T. Clay kindly drew my attention to the fact that Christopher, second son of John Colby of Bowbridge (Introduction, p. xv), by his wife Jane, daughter of Alexander Moore, was Dean of Middleham from 1681 to his death in 1727 (Dugdale, Visitation of Yorkshire, ed. J. W. Clay, iii, 434).

T.S.W.

THE LORDSHIPS OF MIDDLEHAM AND RICHMOND.

The MS. Survey of these two lordships is the property of the Yorkshire Archæological Society, having been presented to that body in 1928 by members of the Yorkshire Tykes' Club. Mr. Willan has subjected the Survey of Wensleydale to a painstaking and intensive analysis. Those of Middleham and Richmond are, however, published only as a record, but it is hoped that they will be useful as a basis for closer examination by students of social and economic history.

The term "lordship of Richmond" is here used in a very restricted sense as compared with the area covered, at an early date by the honor which included not only the whole of Richmondshire but lands in other counties as well.

When Mr. Willan offered his paper on the Survey of Wensleydale to the Society for publication it was thought that the three Surveys covering districts which were contiguous to each other might well be printed together, and that they would make a suitable volume for our Record Series.

A separate index of field names is printed at the end of the book.

A Seventeenth-Century Survey of the Manor of Wensleydale.

Edited by T. S. Willan.

(i) THE MANOR OF WENSLEYDALE.

The manor of Wensleydale "consisted of the possessions of the abbey of Jervaulx in the forest of Wensleydale north of the Ure. In 1086 4 carucates in the place known as Fors were held of Count Alan by Bodin. His nephew Acharis son of Bardolf granted $1\frac{1}{2}$ carucates here to found the abbey of Charity. Hugh son of Gernagan, probably a tenant of Acharis, granted a like amount. This was the nucleus of the abbot's possessions on this side of the river. The monks removed to East Witton in the time of Hervey son of Acharis, and founded there the abbey of Jervaulx. The old building was known as Dale Grange, and in 1301-2 the abbot paid subsidy for it and for the hamlets of Skelgill, Cams House, Simonstone, Cotterdale and others. The whole estate now began to be known as the Manor of Wensleydale, the alternative name (i.e. the manor of Dale Grange) being due to the fact that the courts were held by the steward of the abbey at Dale Grange."¹

At the dissolution of the monasteries and the attainder of the abbot of Jervaulx, the manor of Wensleydale was worth £68 13s. 4d. p.a. It was granted by Henry VIII in 1544 to Matthew Earl of Lennox and Margaret his wife, but returned to the Crown in the person of James I, their grandson.² On 6 August 1603 it was granted to Ludovick Stuart, Duke of Lennox, together with the manors of Settrington and Temple Newsam.³ In Elizabeth's reign there had been disputes between the Crown and the tenants in 1570,¹ and between the Crown and the Countess of Lennox in 1573, over the title to the manor.² Now the Duke of Lennox found himself in conflict, not with the Crown, but with his new tenants. This interesting conflict, which developed within three years of the grant of the manor to the Duke, can be unravelled from the Exchequer Depositions.³ In the course of it the very existence of the manor was disputed, although Thomas Ascoughe, deputy steward, claimed that he knew the lands "on the Abbotside Called (as he hath sene and read in the book called Domesdaie) by the name of the manor or Lordship of Wensladdale." Ascoughe appealed to Domesday Book with all the fervour that Parliamentarians were to appeal to Magna Carta forty years later, but with less justification, for the manor was not mentioned in the Book. The real cause of the conflict was the unfavourable terms upon which the tenants had taken their leases from their new landlord. Under the late Countess of Lennox they had paid fines value 9-10 years' rent for leases of 21 years. Now, for leases of the same term of years, they were paying fines of 30 years' rent to the Duke. Apparently some 16-20 tenants, described by one deponent as "the duke's favourites," took leases on these conditions and paid the first instalment of their fines. They, and probably others, attended the court and acknowledged themselves to be tenants. Early in 1606, however, the tenants who had taken leases met at Hardrow and decided to ask Lennox to mitigate their fines. If he refused they would complain to the King. In the meantime they collected money for the necessary charges and put the matter in the hands of Peter Metcalfe ("Peter of the bowebrigge"). He, and apparently others, interviewed Lennox's commissioners and were sharply reproved as "but busy fellowes," who "came not in the business of their neighbours." This was the story Metcalfe brought back and told to a further meeting of tenants at Holehouses. The tenants thereupon assigned a letter of attorney to Peter Metcalfe and Edmond Pratt to solicit their cause.

There is no evidence of either Metcalfe or Pratt acting under the letter of attorney, for at this stage the movement among the tenants passed into the hands of Anthony Besson of Gray's Inn, the founder of Yorebridge Grammar School near Askrigg.¹ He, more than Metcalfe, was looked upon as the leader of the tenants against the Duke.² Ascoughe, for example, declared that the reasons for the discontent were the greatness of the fines and "Mr Besson's persuasion." At the third meeting of tenants, held at Askrigg Church, Besson declared that "they were about a Course which would be very Chargeable," and persuaded the tenants to bind themselves "for the Securitie of him or those that should prosecute the Cause." According to Tristram Janson, clerk of Aysgarth, Thomas Metcalfe and Richard Metcalfe, his father, had consulted him about becoming bound to Anthony Besson in £70. The condition was that they should contribute according to their tenement in support of the suit against the Duke. Janson urged caution as there was apparently no corresponding obligation on Besson's part; but others had already entered into such bonds. Anthony Besson himself spoke his mind freely on the whole subject to John Lambert of Marsett, yeoman, whom he met in London. The grant of land to the Duke, he said, "was nothing worth and merelie mistaken," and he, Besson, had said as much to the Duke himself. "If the tennants wolde be ruled and guided by him, they should not paie the dukes grace any rente or fines hereafter, or doe him any suite or service at his Courte," but for those who had taken up leases and paid fines "it was lost money." If the tenants would stand by him according to their agreement, Besson declared, he would discharge them at law against the Duke's title to the lands "for an Ascrigge shott."

In the spring, apparently of 1606, on a Sunday before the customary court was due to meet, Anthony Besson and a great part of the tenants of the land in variance met at Hawes Chapel "without the Lordship." There they attended a "preaching then and there made by Mr Leak," who was himself a tenant of Cotterdale. After the sermon Anthony Besson and the tenants held a long private discussion at which it was agreed that the tenants should not appear at the court. At this point Anthony Besson, who was not even a tenant, fell into the background and his place was taken by Richard Besson. There seems to be no evidence of the relationship between the two, though they may have been brothers. Richard appears to have been a man of some local importance. He had a farm at Litherskew and was, in 1606, charged with shooting two hares in the forest of Wensleydale with a gun.¹ At the end of Elizabeth's reign he apparently collected the rents for the manor of Wensleydale and in consequence became involved in a not unusual case concerning a certain discrepancy between the rents collected and the rents paid in.² In 1603 he was granted the bailiwick of Wensleydale for life,³ and in the following year received a number of offices, including those of Forester of Kettlewell, Parker of Woodhall Park, Bowbearer of Wensleydale and collector of rents of Bainbridge and Worton.⁴ These grants did not go unchallenged.⁵

¹ In 1600 he gave two houses in York to maintain a master to teach in a free grammar school in Askrigg (V.C.H. Yorks., i, 480).

² As early as 1585 he had been concerned in a case of a disputed lease of Cams House (Exch. Dep., 27 Eliz., East. no. 17—partly illegible; ibid., 29 Eliz., East. no. 2).

It was left for Richard Besson to challenge openly the Duke's authority. On the day following the meeting at Hawes Chapel he came into the room at Dale Grange, where Thomas Ascoughe was sitting as deputy steward to hold the court, and said, "verie contemptuouslie, without any reverence or regard, 'Howe nowe my maisters, for whome doe you kepe a Courte here?' " To this the deputy steward answered "For the Duke's grace," and Besson replied that the Duke had no authority to keep a court there "and they are fooles that doe appeare here at this tyme." As a result those who were indifferent withdrew, "so as there could not be a jurie had at that tyme," and "used verie hard speaches to the deputie steward and David Balie the duke's bailife, such as had bene sufficient to have drawne on further inconveniences."

There, for want of further evidence, the story ends; but it would appear that the tenants were unsuccessful, at least temporarily, in their struggle with their landlord. Whatever the issue, the conflict is not without interest, for it illustrates the impact of economic forces on a conservative community. The new commercial spirit that was abroad, and especially the general rise in prices of this period, led landlords to try to get more revenue out of their lands. A fine of 9–10 years' rent may have satisfied the 'late Countess', but apparently it did not satisfy the Duke. Hence the increase in fines which precipitated a conflict so characteristic of the agrarian problem of the seventeenth century.

In 1614 Lennox leased the manor for 21 years to Sir John Leedes, John Colby and Henry Goodreeke.¹ Little is known of these men. A Sir John Leedes was in constant trouble at this time for making disrespectful remarks about the King.² John Colby was probably the John Colby of Nappa who died in 1616³ and whose widow, Mary, later acquired a share of the manor. Henry Goodreeke was perhaps the Henry Goodricke who was a Deputy Lieutenant of Yorkshire in 1638–9.⁴ Later in the same year Lennox sold the entire manor to Sir Francis Baidon of Kippax, Thomas Roockwood of London and Edward Rolte of Gray's Inn for £10,000.⁵ It then passed quickly through the hands of a number of men who were probably merely speculators. In May 1616 Baidon, Roockwood and Rolte sold one third of the manor for a "competent some" to Sir Thomas Smith of Kent and David Watkins of London, who in turn sold it for £4,750 to George and Thomas Cole. Another third part was sold by Baidon, Roockwood and Rolte to John Goodman and his son John, who in turn sold it to George Cole. The final third was acquired by Mary Colby,⁶ who leased it to George Cole for ten years at a rent of £220 per annum.⁷ Eight commissioners were appointed, four named by George and Thomas Cole and four by Mary Colby, to survey the manor and divide it into three equal parts, two of which were to go to the Coles and one to Mary Colby. George Cole was to get the schedule of Mary's share so that he could give leases to the undertenants. This survey was carried out by Robert Saxton, gentleman, aged 33, of Dunningley (?), Yorks. He was probably the Robert Saxton, son of the more famous Christopher, who was assisting his father in making surveys of property in the West Riding in 1601.¹ Robert Saxton made use of the plot or map which Samuel Peirse had drawn up for the survey of 1614.² He seems to have surveyed 3,003 acres of common, which may have been meant to represent a third of Stags Fell, but unfortunately the actual award is largely illegible.³ From some later additions to the survey of 1614 it appears that the Colby share of the manor comprised Dale Grange, Helm, Skelgill, Yorescot, Brockillcote, and, except for one tenement, Shawcote and Holehouses.⁴

George Cole (for little more is heard of Thomas) was left in anything but quiet enjoyment of the manor. His position seems to have been challenged on the one side by those from whom he had bought part of the manor and on the other side by the tenants, who seem to have kept up a running fight with successive owners.⁵ On 25 June 1623 provisional agreement was reached between Cole and his tenants. It was stated that for twenty years suits had been depending between the tenants of that part of Wensleydale north of the Ure and those that claimed from His Majesty, and between Sir Thomas Smith, Sir William Smith, John Goodman and John Colby on the one hand and George Cole on the other, concerning the conveyance of two thirds of the manor from the Smiths and Goodman. The suits had spent and wasted a great part of the tenants' estates, for they were "notable to contend in Law with the said George Cole fore redresse of their wronges." The tenants petitioned the King on 9 June 1621, and they and Cole appeared before the Assizes at Lancaster, where it was decreed that they should quietly enjoy their houses and garths and one third of their lands with rights of common, Cole keeping two thirds.¹

Immediately after this decree Cole began to lease some of the land for 2,000 years for a capital sum and a nominal rent per annum. Thus on 1 November 1624 George Cole of the Inner Temple leased to Thomas Tinkard of Sedbusk, yeoman, for 2,000 years, for 20s. in cash and 1s. 6*d.* per annum, a dwelling-house, garths, a parcel of ground called Rush Dale and two cattlegates in the High Pasture, all in the occupation of Tinkard. The lessor retained all the mineral rights and the right of carriage of coal and turf through the premises. The lessee agreed to give two days mowing and two days haymaking per annum "in Mowing tyme and Haytime"; in default of a day's mowing he was to pay 12*d.* and of a day's haymaking 6*d.* He was also to give one day's labour with a horse to fetch coals from any place in the manor to Cole's mansion; on default he was to pay 8*d.* The lessee also agreed to pay the "Rateable contribution towards the Reparation of the Chappell of Hardrowe" and to grind his corn at Cole's mill in Hardrow, provided he was "used as well at the said Mill as . . . at any other Mill or mills whatsoever." Finally he was to do suit and service at the court yearly, to procure the good and welfare of Cole, and not to be a party to plots and practices against him. Other houses, land and cattlegates in Sedbusk were leased on the same conditions.²

These conditions may have been considered too onerous or Cole may have refused to carry out the decree of 1623, for a final settlement between himself and his tenants was only reached in 1632. On 11 July 1632 it was stated that "whereas George Sadler, George Thwaites, Bartholomew Thwaites, George Wynne the elder, Thomas Tynkard, Charles Atkinson, Thomas Todd, George Wynne the younger, George Thwaites, Thomas Thompson, George Todd, Michael Metcalfe, John Metcalfe, Martin Thwaites, John Kettlewell, Michael and Henry Dent, John Wynne, Wilfred Moore, John Blencarne have exhibited their Bill of Complaint into his Maiesties Court of Whitehall against George Cole, esquire, defendant their Landlord for and concerning the better and more firm establishing of their houses and garthes and a third part of their tenements unto them and their heires," the Lord Privy Seal and the rest of His Majesty's Council decreed that the complainants "shall severally and respectively have hold and enioy their houses and garthes and such landes or tenements as were devided and sett out by the said defendant or his assignees with common of pasture proportionable thereunto, unto them for and during the whole and full Terme of two thousand years. Paying yearly at everie Martinmas hereafter the third part of their old rent which belonged to their whole farme when it was entire and one boone day yearly in hay time."¹ Although this judgment seems to have affected only a limited number of tenants, largely those of Sedbusk, it was favourable to those whom it did concern, which was a not unusual feature of judgments made by the central authorities during the years of the personal rule of Charles I.

After 1632 land in and around Sedbusk changed hands freely, being granted for the remainder of the term of 2,000 years on payment of capital sums together with a nominal rent to the "chief lord of the soil," who was Sir John Lowther of Lowther, although it is uncertain when he acquired an interest in the manor.² A small part of Cole's share of the manor also passed to Sir Robert Bindloss of Borwick, Lancashire.³ This was the Cams House portion, for on 31 January 1652 Sir Robert sold to Bernard Smith of Cams House all the lands, messuages, etc., known by the name of Cams House. The whole comprised 333 acres, with two messuages, and the price was £1,125. The land was said to be late in the tenure of George Thwaite and now in the tenure of Bernard Smith.⁴ Smith, who was chief constable of Hang West in 1665,⁵ had married George Thwaite's widow sometime before 1635, and in that year he and his wife sold property in Sedbusk to Augustine Metcalfe and Henry, his son, for £135.⁶

In the second half of the seventeenth century a new dispute arose, this time concerning the third part of the manor held by Mary Colby. This was inherited by John Colby,¹ Mary's son, who sold it in 1678 to Alexander Smith.² The purchase price was £4,300, of which £1,300 was paid and the remainder secured. Anthony Fothergill³ and Thomas Lambert were to have proportions of Smith's purchase "on good consideration." After John Colby's death his son and heir, Alexander, sued Smith, Lambert and Fothergill in Chancery to have the purchase set aside. According to Alexander Colby's story the purchase, conveyance and fine were obtained from his father by fraud. The purchase money was to be paid in instalments spread over seven years and was therefore not really more than one third of the value of the premises. The Court of Chancery agreed with Alexander Colby and ordered the property to be re-conveyed to him. He took possession and tendered £2,800 in repayment as decreed by the Court, but Smith refused it. According to the writer in the Victoria County History, "Alexander Colby tried to set aside the sale . . . but apparently without success."⁴ Actually the case went to the House of Lords, which on 18 November 1685 dismissed the appeal of Smith, Fothergill and Lambert and affirmed the decree made in the Court of Chancery.⁵

After the seventeenth century the history of the manor is uneventful. In 1717 the whole manor was in the hands of Lord Lonsdale, who sold it in 1723 to Edward Wortley. As part of the Wortley estates it appears under a new name, that of the manors of High and Low Abbotside. It passed from Edward Wortley to his descendants, the Earls of Wharncliffe. About 1885 part of the estate which had belonged to John Colby was sold to the Hon. William Lowther, and in 1913 the remainder was broken up and disposed of in lots.¹ The lordship of the manor is now held jointly by S. H. Willan, esquire, and C. M. Fawcett, esquire.

¹ He is usually described as the builder of Colby Hall (Whaley, Askrigg, p. 50), but the Hall was built in 1633 when he was only 19 (Dugdale, Visitation, Surtees Soc., xxxvi, 47). It seems more probable that it was built by his mother.

(ii) THE LAND.

The survey of 1614 is written on paper and consists of 88 folios, $7\frac{1}{2}'' \times 9\frac{7}{10}''$, bound in contemporary vellum. The survey itself takes up ff. 1–80, the remaining folios being either blank or covered with notes and scribbles of a later date. Originally a map accompanied the survey, upon which the holdings were marked with letters or symbols, but unfortunately the map can no longer be traced. The whole was apparently the work of Samuel Peirse of Maidstone in Kent. The surveyor's county of origin has left its mark on the survey, for all the land measurements are given in acres, roods, day's works and perches. The day's work was "the smallest Kentish unit of superficial land measure"² and was equal to four perches.³ Its appearance in the survey suggests that attention should be paid to the county of origin of surveyors before using land measures as evidence of a particular field system.⁴ Peirse's arithmetic was not infallible, and a succession of minor errors in addition seems to justify the giving of two sets of figures, one obtained by adding particular items, the other comprising the surveyor's totals. The following two tables summarize the area and yearly value of the manor as revealed by the survey. The discrepancy between the value and the rent was probably covered by the fines, but there is no evidence in the survey itself of the value of such fines.

The manor was a well-defined area bounded on the east by Merbeck,⁵ on the west by Hell Gill Beck, on the south by the Ure, and on the north, as a deponent⁶ picturesquely described it, "as heaven water deales and divides the commons moores and waste from Swaledale," or more prosaically, by the watershed of ⁴ Gray, for example, says (op. cit.) that the appearance outside Kent of the sulung, the iugum and the day's work "will suggest the Kentish system." He admits that this "is less true of the day's work," but pays no attention to the question of where the surveyor using the terms came from.

Stags Fell. Outside these well-defined natural boundaries were the cottages in Askrigg, which were included in the survey but were “no parte of the landes of the Abby of Jarvax,”² and some land in Lunds, including part of the cowpasture.³ The monks of Jervaulx had also had rights of pasture south of the Ure granted to them by Conan, duke of Brittany and earl of Richmond, in the twelfth century,⁴ and confirmed by Ranulph son of Robert in 1218.⁵ In the sixteenth century the abbot had paid £6 per annum and the tenants £10 for an agistment south of the river. Towards the £10 the tenants of Thwaite in Swaledale had paid 6s. 8d. “for the pasture of their cattell when they come on the Fell.”⁶ None of these rights of pasture is mentioned in the survey and it is possible that they lapsed in the course of the sixteenth century.

There is one preliminary problem concerning the manor and the survey which requires at least an attempted solution. It is the problem whether all the land within the boundaries given above was included in the survey. It can only be solved by comparing the area of land included in the survey with the total area of land within the rough rectangle formed by the boundaries.

This rough rectangle became later the townships of Low and High Abbotside, the former comprising Dale Grange, Helm, Skelgill, Brockillcote and Shawcote, the latter comprising the area from Cams House to Lunds. Low Abbotside had an area of 4,738 acres, of which 2,722 were unenclosed moor. Thus the enclosed portion comprised 2,016 acres, and this included Sargill Park.¹ The area of this enclosed portion which is included in the survey was 1,974 acres 3 roods 3 perches.² Thus as regards the eastern end of the manor, which later became the township of Low Abbotside, the survey comprises practically all the enclosed land. The township of High Abbotside had an area of 13,229 acres, of which 6,900 acres were open moor.³ The enclosed land therefore comprised 6,329 acres, but the enclosed land, including the cowpastures, comprised within this area and given in the survey consisted of only 5,010 acres 1 rood 3 perches.⁴ Thus some 1,319 acres of enclosed land in the area of the later township of High Abbotside were apparently not included in the survey. This discrepancy cannot be accounted for by a difference in the size between the acre of 1614 and the acre of the nineteenth century, for they seem to have comprised the same area. Nor can it be accounted for by a difference between the boundaries of the townships and the boundaries of the area within which the manor lay. These boundaries were the same on the east, south and west. The northern boundary is vaguer, but that is scarcely important, as it affects only the area of moorland and not of enclosed land. Nor can the discrepancy be accounted for by later enclosure of moorland, which would have helped to swell the nineteenth-century total of 6,329 acres.⁵ It would seem, therefore, that some 1,300 acres of enclosed land in what was later the township of High Abbotside were not included in the survey. If they were part of the manor of Wensleydale they must have been held in freehold, which seems the most reasonable explanation.

⁴ I.e. cowpastures 1,197a. 4p., land held in severalty 3,813a. 39p.

The general lay-out of the manor and the type of agriculture employed are fairly clear from the survey. It was a pastoral manor with no arable land, and it was enclosed, only the moor and the cowpastures being held in common, and the latter were "for the most parte enclosed too."¹ Thus there is no question of open field cultivation, of scattered strips, or of two- or three-field systems. Thus, perhaps, there is no need for controversy. All the land outside the moor and the cowpastures was described as meadow and pasture. It is often impossible to distinguish the two, but the following table shows what were probably their relative values, the meadow being, as might be expected, much the more valuable of the two.

Table III.

There is little evidence of even former arable land. It is true that George Cole had his mill at Hardrow at which the tenants had to grind their corn, but the corn must have come from outside the manor, probably from lower down the dale. Only in a few field-names, 'Stubledayle' and Reaper's close at Sedbusk and corn closes at Dale Grange, Sedbusk, Litherskew and Cams House, is there an echo of former arable cultivation.

In such a manor, rights of common were obviously important. On the Out Moor, which lay on Stags Fell, all tenants had "common of pasture as appurtenant to their Tenements without stinte or rate,"² and there, too, they had rights of common of turbary.⁴ Before the dissolution the abbot had depasturage at 'Came' (? Cams House) for "a great flocke of weathers" which were wintered at Simonstone. Cattle from the abbey had also mixed with those of the tenants in Sargill Park, Spen and Abbots Close, "wherein hay was gotten for the cattell and shepe of the Abbey."¹ By 1614 Abbots Close was no longer held in common.² The abbot had also had pasturage for a "stone horse and certen mares" in Cotterdale Bank and for "two stoned horses and certen amblinge mares" in "a place called Rigge under Cotterend," and here all the tenants' cattle had pasturage.³ By the time of the survey the common pasturage for cattle was well defined in the stinted cowpastures. Various places had no cowpastures. This is true of Yorescot (which is rather surprisingly given as all meadow), of Litherskew, Abbots Close, Forsdale, Newhouses, Riggs Close and Thwaite. Yorescot, Abbots Close and Thwaite were single holdings, the last being very large with presumably enough pasture of its own. Newhouses, Riggs Close and Forsdale consisted of two holdings each. One tenant of Newhouses had six cattlegates in Simonstone pasture,⁴ and Charles Atkinson of Forsdale had gates in Hardrow and Simonstone pastures.⁵ At Litherskew it is possible that the cowpasture had been divided up even by 1614, for three tenants held parts of Litherskew Slights,⁶ which may at one time have been a common pasture. Similarly at Shawcote the Little Cow Close, which had once been a cowpasture, was in 1614 divided into four parts, which were no longer held in common.⁷ At Cams House, too, where the cowpasture was only 52 acres 39 perches in extent, earlier cowpastures appear to have been divided out.⁸ The following table summarizes the number and value of the cattlegates. They seem to have varied in value not in accordance with the relation between the size of the pasture and the number of gates, but according to the fertility of the land.

The fact that the manor was enclosed by 1614 suggests some inquiry into when it was enclosed. Unfortunately there is not much evidence in the survey or elsewhere of recent enclosure. It seems fairly clear, however, that considerable enclosure was going on in the sixteenth century. In 1573 it was said that the late abbot had made some enclosures at Dale Grange, Litherskew, Sedbusk, Simonstone, and Hardrow. At Hardrow he had enclosed Broad Carr, which in the survey (f. 48) is given as containing 25 acres 2 roods 3 perches. A deponent, William Metcalfe, in the same year declared that Lord William Conyers, “called lame Conyers,” Steward of Middleham, had appointed a parcel of common to be enclosed “for their (i.e. the tenants’) commodities,” and the abbot also appointed a parcel “about lviiij yeres sinz for it was shortlie after Floden feild where the tennants had lost all their horses.” The abbot had also taken off the common a piece of ground called “Rygge fote and Coterfosse,” and by appointment of Conyers the tenants had taken a parcel of the said common “unto their commodities.” The abbot had also begun to enclose a piece of ground called ‘Jeprake’ (?), but the steward and tenants of certain of the grounds “would not suffer the same to procede, but cast downe that which was begun and so it was not inclosed.” Metcalfe “being yonge was present at the castinge downe thereof,” which was about 50 years since

² It is possible that more gates were held by freeholders within the manor.

(i.e. about 1523).¹ Some thirty years later, in 1607, another deponent, John Lambert, declared that there had been improvements “taken of the commons and moores” and that divers houses had been built on the commons by the tenants of the late Countess.² There is little reflection of this in the survey, which does, however, record two houses in Cotterdale “lately erected upon the Out Moore.”³ Two other houses, one in Skelgill and one at Hardrow, were also “lately erected.”⁴ In two cases houses had been divided into two,⁵ and in a third case a turfhouse had been converted into a dwelling-house.⁶ These changes may mean little, and on the wider question of enclosure the survey is silent.

The holdings of which the manor was composed varied greatly in size, as the following table shows.

⁹ Includes 13 cottages in Askrigg.

Omitting holdings of under one acre, which were actually houses or cottages without land, simple division reveals that fictitious entity, the average farm, as comprising 43 acres. The range in size of the farms was very great—from just over one acre, if such can be dignified with the name of farm, to just over 800 acres. It is some indication of large-scale farming that 45% of the land (omitting Stags Fell, Sargill Park and the cowpastures) was occupied by only six farms. The farms themselves seem to have had an appearance similar to the present day, with the garths and closes round the house and the barns in the fields. Many had turf-houses for peat and the large number of gardens is rather noteworthy. Ten houses¹ had no gardens, sixty-two had one garden each, twenty-five had two gardens each, six had three each, four had ‘several,’ and one house had four gardens.

In the course of the next three centuries the land and its uses do not seem to have altered much. There is a continuity in agrarian history which is too often ignored. Parts of England may have experienced an agrarian revolution, but there seems to have been nothing revolutionary in the changes which took place on enclosed pastoral manors. Changes there were, in the case of the manor of Wensleydale, both in ownership and structure. The estate changed hands and was finally divided up, in this assisting in the emergence of the twentieth-century yeoman. In the nineteenth century the cowpastures were divided and allotted among the owners of cattlegates, but this occasioned no upheaval comparable to the enclosure of open arable field manors. Similarly the “several moors, commons and waste lands” over which the tenants had rights of common were converted into stinted pasture. Some 8,000 sheep-gates were created and distributed among the holdings. Communal shepherds are still kept to look after the ‘gated’ sheep on the fells. Holdings have decayed and many of the farm-houses of the survey are in ruins or have become barns or have disappeared altogether. Such changes, spread over three hundred years, are as inevitable as they are evolutionary. The fields, and with them the field-names, remain—bound, as it were for ever, within their grey stone walls.

He passed through Hardrow and climbed onto the fells above Cotterdale. "The prospect from the height of Cotter," he wrote, "is the most awful and grand I ever beheld. The mountain all around . . . and the valley beneath, which tho' it is much narrower to the west of Ascrig, yet it is still a fine vale of good pasturage, and, what is uncommon, there are houses built in most of the fields, which is an unusual prospect, and at a distance make the appearance of scatter'd villages."¹ A hundred and fifty years earlier he would have seen much the same. A century and a half later he would have seen much the same, too.

Seventeenth-Century Surveys of the Lordships of Middleham and Richmond.

Edited by E. W. Crossley.

(A) The Lordship of Middleham.

At the date of the Survey of 1605 the lordship of Middleham was in the hands of the Crown. It had been granted by Edward IV in 1473 to his brother Richard, duke of Gloucester, on whose accession to the throne as Richard III in 1483 it again came to the Crown,² and so remained until Charles I in 1628 sold it, with certain reservations, to the citizens of London.³ The lordship covered a large area in Wensleydale, including besides Middleham most of the extensive parish of Aysgarth, the parish of West Witton, and large parts of those of Coverham and East Witton, besides detached properties at Leyburn, par. Wensley, at Scotton, par. Catterick, and Crakehall and Rands in par. of Bedale, all in Richmondshire; and in addition the manor of Kettlewell, with Scale Park, par. Kettlewell, and some lands at Cold Coniston, par. Gargrave, in the West Riding.

The canons of Coverham were already endowed with lands in Coverham, but further lands in the parish passed out of the possession of the lords of Middleham when, in Feb. 1404-5, licence was obtained by Ralph, earl of Westmorland, the then lord, to grant in mortmain three messuages called Swineside, Hindlethwaite and Arkleside in Coverdale on the south side of the river Cover in a place called Haucreygill, a messuage, etc., in Scrafton in Coverdale, a close called Halleflatte in Carlton, with houses in it, and common of pasture for 60 oxen, etc., held of the King as of the castle and honour of Richmond, to the abbot and convent of Coverham in exchange for a moiety of the manor of Kettlewell in Craven, except the advowson of the church, and for a messuage and common of pasture for 24 cows and 1 bull in Coverham, not held of the King, and appropriated to them by royal licence.¹ Further, on the 15 Dec. 1484 the feoffees of the King of the lordship of Middleham granted to the abbot and convent of Coverham a vaccary called Slapegill als. Coverhead, late parcel of the said lordship, in exchange for 68 ac. of arable land and a waste containing about 8 ac. now enclosed in the King's park, called Cotiscugh by Middleham.² It was by the first of these exchanges that Kettlewell came to be included in the lordship of Middleham. The King also, on 24 Feb. 1405, granted to the said Ralph Nevill, earl of Westmorland, and his heirs free warren in all their demesne lands in Kettlewell, and licence to impark 300 acres of land in the same town, and hold it as a park and fortify it with a wall of stone and mortar, and crenellate the wall and make battlements on it.³ To this was added, on 10 Nov. 1409, a grant of free chase in all their demesne lands in the town of Kettlewell.⁴ This park was called Scale Park, from the long and steep ascent within it from Craven into Coverdale.

“ A manor ” in Aysgarth was held by the de Burghs in the thirteenth century. Thomas de Burgh died in 1322. His sister Elizabeth, who was the wife of Alexander de Mountford, obtained “ the manor ” in 1324. It descended with the Mountford lands until Thomas Mountford conveyed his rights in Burton, Walden and Aysgarth to Richard, duke of Gloucester, in 1480, and they subsequently followed the descent of Middleham.⁵ There was a special grave for these lands mentioned in the list of fees, and a special keeper of these lands, with which was included the Heyning.¹

(B) The Lordship of Richmond.

In 1605 this lordship included the parishes of Bowes and Arkengarthdale; Hope in the parish of Barningham; Crackpot, and certain tenements in Healaugh, Reeth and Harkerside in the parish of Grinton. Hope, although in the parish of Barningham, was in the New Forest and, forming part of the chase of the earls of Richmond, it followed the descent of the manor of Arkengarthdale.² The lordship of Richmond came to the Crown in the same way as Middleham and followed it in descent until Charles I sold it to the citizens of London in 1628.³

The Dispute with the Tenants.

In the Observations (p. 147) it is mentioned that the tenants of the two lordships had "long tyme before the 14th of Q. Elizabeth challenged a customary estate in the nature of Copiehold.... in all theyre severall Tenementes." There is a record of the consideration by the Privy Council on 28 Jan. 1551-2 of a letter to the chancellor, with a supplication exhibited by the tenants of the manor of Middleham, which he is willed to consider, and hereafter not to suffer any part of the same manor to be granted out by lease, but to let the tenants continue therewith as they have been accustomed.⁴ On 8 June 1564 the Queen wrote to the earl of Northumberland that she had heard that as steward of her seignories and lordships of Middleham and Richmond he did not conform to the order of the Court of Exchequer for her profit. She commanded him so to do, and to order his deputies so to proceed and keep their courts as the Exchequer officers desired.⁵ On Sept. 15 following the Queen again wrote to the earl that she had authorized the Lord Treasurer, Sir Ric. Sackville, under Treasurer, to survey and let the castles, parks, farms, etc., belonging to his seigniorship of Middleham. She required him to order his understeward, and other officers there, to attend upon her Commissioners, to keep courts, and to enter all grants that should be made.¹ On the 23rd of the same month Lord Treasurer Winchester wrote the earl that the order of the Queen's lands in Middleham, whereof he was high steward, did not proceed, because he claimed for the tenants a tenant right whereof there is no record. The Queen had written to him to order his deputies to assist such commissioners as she had sent for doing thereof. If he suffered this to be done she had given order that it should be done agreeably to justice and the tenants' satisfaction, without touching his honour and office, for his understeward should keep the courts for the commissioners and make record. If he thought this prejudicial to his honour he would declare this to Her Highness and leave the matter to her own order.¹ The earl wrote to the Lord Treasurer on the 10 Oct. acknowledging the receipt of the Queen's and his letters, and added that when time shall serve he would be most willing in these affairs. Considering, however, how importunate he had been on the tenants' behalf for the establishment of their custom, he begged him to have in remembrance what good liking it had been to them, and commodity to Her Majesty, to have such custom established he well knew by report, and how much the former Councils respected its antiquity; now he, thinking to do good service by staying the suit of a multitude of the tenants to Her Majesty, took it upon himself, which he fancied the Lord Treasurer did not like, whilst they, the tenants, thought he had not done what they expected, and have lost what they could have secured, and this might impair his credit with them. If this may not persuade, and the contrary is to be used, rather than any delay of Her Majesty's profit shall be imputed to him, he would earnestly travail thereon.¹

There is an abstract (24 June 1565) of the Commission to the Lord Treasurer, Chancellor and Understeward of the Exchequer for letting the Queen's lands—in the seigniories of Middleham and Richmond. In these seigniories, on account of the pretended title of tenants' rights, the lands may be let for 40 years after survey, two years' rent to be paid for a gressom,² repairs to be done and horse and armour found by the tenant; all lands of yearly value of 40s. and under may be let by copy of court roll, by the stewards and others, in commission and in open court, with certain provisos; widows to have their estate in the lands, eldest sons the preference in leases, etc., with rates of difference between this and the former Commission.¹

There is an undated (? 1595) abstract of a decree as to the rights of the tenants of Middleham and Richmondshire, reciting that they held by tenant right until the 30th Eliz., when they had leases of 40 years, yielding their ancient rents and services, which services were inserted in their leases, viz., that every tenant should furnish an able man for the service in the north, pay two years' rent as a fine at the death of the Prince, one year's rent upon every alienation, and two upon every renewal. At the end of every lease the eldest son of every tenant then living should have a new one like the former. To settle all questions and contentions upon these clauses all leases formerly or hereafter to be granted in reversion, but on expiration or surrender only. Also that the lease should revert to the heir, and not to the executor; and that the heir should pay the fine; and that the words "eldest son" should extend to the eldest daughter, and to the next of blood, in the male or female, in default of issue of the body.²

In regard to the fines in this abstract, they are the same as those mentioned in the Observations as being imposed in 14 Eliz., except that the fine of two years' rent on the death of a tenant is not included.³

On 17 Oct. 1608 a proposition was made to the Lord Treasurer for increasing the King's revenues by composition with the tenants of Richmond and Middleham. Apparently some arrangement was attempted on these lines, as there is a reference in the Observations⁴ where it is stated that those who took leases of 40 years about the 8 James I, when they renewed their leases, paid four years' old rent fine for composition. On 30 June 1609 the King's tenants of Richmond and Middleham petitioned Salisbury, praying that a time might be appointed for them to attend and amend their defective titles.⁵ In 1611, however, the tenants of Middleham and Richmond refused to pay the composition ordered to the steward, Sir Thomas Metcalfe.¹ From this time, at present, there is less evidence available in regard to the progress of the dispute.

The claim of the tenants was that they held their estates by custom in the nature of copyhold. A similar claim had been put forward by the tenants of Wensleydale and Barnard Castle. In the case of Wensleydale the Duke of Lennox and Richmond, to whom the King had granted that manor, overthrew the tenants in a suit in the Exchequer Court; and in the case of the King's tenants in the lordship of Barnard Castle they yielded themselves without suit.² The tenants of Middleham and Richmond, however, in spite of their having taken leases in 14 Eliz., persisted in their claim, partly on account of certain provisions contained in them. The Crown contended that the tenants could produce no documentary evidence of a custom in the nature of copyhold before the 14 Eliz.; that the tenants could not hold both by lease and custom; that the proviso in the lease that they should attend the warden of the Marches against Scotland, with horse and man furnished for war at their own expense, ceased with the coming of King James; that the covenant to renew their leases was vacated by the purchase made by the city; and that the fines due on the Prince's death could not be claimed by the city.²

The Grant to the City.

The grant of Charles I to the citizens of London, dated 25 Sept., 4 Chas. (1628),³ begins by reciting "the divers large sums of money lent to our late most deare father the Lord James—of blessed memory—and also to us after our accession to the Crown," which with reasonable interest before 3 Jan. last came to the sum of £229,897; and then the King grants his reversion in the lordships of Middleham and Richmond, the castles, lordships, manors, comots,⁴ parks, lands, etc., in Richmondshire, with many exceptions; amongst other things excluding “out of our present grant, to us, our heirs and successors altogether reserved” all and singular forests, chases and all parks now used and filled with deer, and all knights’ fees, wards, marriages and all advowsons, donations, free dispositions and rights of patronage of all rectories, churches, vicarages, chapels and other ecclesiastical benefices within the premises, and also all mines of gold and silver; also 26s. 8*d.* yearly from the site of the castle of Middleham granted in fee farm to Sir Henry Lindley, Kt., and John Starkey; the West park of Middleham, granted in fee farm to Thomas Crompton, esq., at £22 0s. 8*d.* yearly; the East park of Middleham, the park of Wanlez (£6 13s. 4*d.*); and all those parks in fee farm called Cottescugh (£6 13s. 4*d.*), Sonscugh (£10), Capelbancke (£10); the water corn mill in Aiskarth (26s. 8*d.*); decayed rents (23s. 4*d.*); all liberties and jurisdiction of chases “as far as our chase of Bishopsdale extends” in the towns of Walden, Thoraby, Newbigging, Aikesgarth and Bishopsdale; the agistment of the park of Woodhall (£4); 20s. yearly for a parcel of pasture in fee farm at Middleham; all liberties and jurisdictions of a forest as far as the New Forest extends in the lordship or manor of Arkilgarthdale; the manor of Crakehall (£34 9s. 3*d.*), the mill there (£3 13s. 4*d.*). The total fee farm rents reserved to the King were £778 3s. 8½*d.* Certain enclosures new approved in the two lordships (£121 11s. 1¼*d.*) were also excepted, and a number of other items.

The Manuscript.

The MS., which is beautifully written, consists of 46 pages, measuring 14½ by 10 inches. The pagination stops at p. 36, at the end of the general abstract of both lordships. Pages [37] and [38] are filled with “Some Observacions.” A table of the divisions occupies page [39]. There is a second lot of “Observations” on page [40]. Pages [41] to [46] are blank. The MS. is bound in white vellum, with gold tooling on front and back covers, and has green silk ties. It contains a copy of the original surveys of 1605, which ends at the bottom of page 36. The two sets of Observations and the table are not part of the original surveys, which appear to have been made in the interests of the Crown, which was losing heavily owing to the greatly improved value of the lands. This view is supported by the statement in the survey of Middleham that the improvement in the value of the castle and demesnes might well be raised if his Majesty, by giving satisfaction to Sir Henry Lindley, would resume the grant (p. 83). There was also the additional inducement of finally settling the long-drawn-out dispute between the Crown and its tenants.

Two questions arise—(1) When was this copy made? and (2) For what purpose? Firstly, it is clear from numerous references in the margin of the MS. to the exclusion of certain properties from the grant by the King to the citizens of London in 1628, that the copy must have been made subsequent to that event. Secondly, as to its object. The grant did not include the whole of the lordships of Middleham and Richmond. There were numerous exceptions—e.g. forests, chases and parks, advowsons, fee farm rents, etc. The management of these properties and the collection of the rents and fees would necessitate the employment of an official, to whom the copy of the surveys would be of great assistance.

Court of the Manor of Middleham. In the same year James Guy of Shawcote and Henry Metcalfe of Forsdale were charged with breaking into a cowshed, the door of which was locked, at High Cote and driving away a cow of Anthony Pratt's. Pratt was bound to appear to present a bill of indictment of felony, but he preferred an indictment of trespass, a preference which cost him a 10s. fine (North Riding Q.S. Records, ii, 11-13). In 1621 Anthony was charged with an assault on James Metcalfe, constable of Bainbridge, for serving a warrant on him, and "after he had assaulted him ran awaie from him" (Ibid., ii, 251).

¹ It is not clear why small areas of land in Cotterdale should have been held by such distinguished tenants as Lords Wharton and Morley. The seclusion of the little dale suggests a suitable refuge for Roman Catholics; but that could hardly apply to Philip, Lord Wharton (1555–1625). He may, however, have had some local connexion, for the family were lords of the manors of Wharton and Nateby in Kirkby Stephen (Complete Peerage, ed. 1887–98, viii, 124–5). His second wife, whom he married in 1597, was a Dorothy Colby (E. R. Wharton, The Whartons of Wharton Hall, pp. 27–28), but it is uncertain whether she had any connexion with the local Colbys. Edward, Lord Morley (1551?–1618), came of a catholic family which was implicated in the Northern Rising of 1570, but he himself “appears to have conformed to the Protestant religion.” He was a commissioner for the trials of Mary, Queen of Scots, of Philip, Earl of Arundel, and of Robert, Earl of Essex (Complete Peerage, ix, 226–27).

Some Observacons concerning these two Lordshipps.

- Castles. There are three Castles wthin these Lordships, viz. Midleham, Richmond & Bowes—ruined.
- Markets. There are three Market Townes, Midleham, & Kettlewell within y^e Lo^p of Midleham, & Richmond within that Lordship.
- Churches. In the Lo^p of Midleham are fyve Churches, viz.
1. Midleham in the King's guift
 2. Coverham, an Impropriation in the guift of S Freeman, etc
 3. Kettlewell, an Impropriation in the guift of Bernard Calvert
 4. Aisgarth, an Impropriation in the guift of Trinity Colledg in Cambridge
 5. West Witton, an Impropriation in the King's guift, in leasse to S^r Henry Slingsby
- In the Lo^p of Richmond are 2 Churches, viz.
1. Bowes, an Impropriation in the guift of Philip Brumskill.
 2. Arkengarth, an Impropriation in the King's guift, in leasse to S^r Henry Compton
- Woods. There are few or no woods or tymber trees in the two Lo^{pps} besides the woods growing in Radale, Bishops dale Chace & the Heaning; the rest are in hedgrowes & consist of Ashe, Hasel, Hollings & the like
- Mynes. There are in the two Lo^{pps} mynes of Coale & Lead in diverse places, but of small value.
- Estates. There are no Copieholders in the Lo^{pps}, but freeholders, lessees & tenants at will
- Quality. The greatest part of these two Lo^{pps} consists of Medow and Pasture, & Out Commons, wth a small quantity of Arrable land, it being not able to beare Corne for y^e coldnes of the soyle and the length of winter there.¹ The best sort of Meadow is worth 5^s y^e acre, the second sort 2^s 6^d, the third 12^d. The best pasture is worth 3^s 4^d the acre, the second 18^d, & the third 4^d. The best arrable is worth 4^s the acre, the second 2^s, and the third 12^d. And after this proporcon all the lands in this Survey were valued. The Tennants of these Mannors have long tyme before the 14th of Q. Elizabeth chalenged a Customary estate in the nature of Copiehold to them & theyre heyres in all theyre Severall Tenementes, paieing a fyne of a peny only at death or alienacon of Lord or Tennant. In wch. 14th yeare that Custome was taken away, & leasses for 40 yeares were graunted to them seuerally of theyre severall tenementes. In consideracon of two yeares rent payd for a fyne. In theyre Leasses are these Clauses or Condictions. The Tennants at the death of Lord or Tennant or upon renewing theyre Leasses to pay two yeares rent of the yearly value in the name of a fyne, & one yeares value or rent at every alienacion. They are to doe suit & service at Middleham, Bainbrigg, etc., according to Custome. They are not to alienate for longer then theyre owne lives & sixe yeares after theyre decease wthout consent of the Steward, Auditor, Receyvour, & Surveyor, or any three of them whereof the steward to be one. They are also to doe all services for the prince as in former tymes according to Custome. The Queene covenanted to grant to them & theyre eldest sons surviving new leasses at the end of the 40 yeares under the same rents & covenants & for the like terme.

The Tennants of these Lo^{pps} have diverse names of holdings as they terme them.

1 Some have leasses for 40 yeares taken about the 8th yeare of K. James (1610), wth a covenant for like terme for 40 yeares more after the expiracon of the present terme payeng two yeares old rent for a fyne to the Crowne.

1 But these Tennants when they renewed theyre leasses, besides the fyne of two yeares old rent, paye foure yeares like fyne for composicon, w^{ch} they say was for confirmacon

2 They gave to S^r Tho. Metcalfe (then High Steward of the said Mannors) two yeares more as a gratuity to procure his assistance to renew theyre leasses, w^{ch} eight yeares fyne was an absolute breach (as is conceyved) of that custome, w^{ch} they pretend to be so strong, & is confirmed by a decree in the Exchequer Court, in the 37th of Q. Eliz.

¹ This accounts for the low valuation of the arable land.

- 2 Other Tennants have leasses of 40 yeares also beginning about the same tyme wth the former, wth like covenants & condicons, saving that the covenant for renewing for 40 yeares more is left out
- 3 Others have leasses but for 21 yeares absolute, expired long since.
- 4 Others have leasses for lives,
- 5 And others have no estate at all, but these are very few.

Yet all these severall sorts of Tennants pretend to hold by one & the same custome.

It is conceyved that they cannot hold by lease & custome too.

[p. 38]

It is reported that the Lord Duke of Lennox & Richmond, Lodowick, had land wthin these Lo^{pps} of the same custome as was pretended but he overthrew them in a suit of law in the Exchequer Court.

The Lordship of Berna Castle¹ was formerly held in the same nature, & was also the land of K. Richard the third. But the tennants therof yealderd themselves wthout suit (as is said) & now hold altogither by speciall graunt, wthout pretence of that covenant.

The Cheife Custome they pretend (in nature of copiehold) was this & inserted into the first graunts & leasses they tooke for 40 yeares about the 13th or 14th of Q. Eliz., That so often as occasion should require they should be ready to attend the Lord Wardens of the Marches against Scotland wth horse & men well furnished for warre at theyre owne charge as long as need should require, w^{ch} was an unlimited service. But the Tennants now say, they were to serve but 14 dayes at theyre owne charge, and afterwards at the charge of the Soveraigne.

But this service ceassed at the coming in of K. James, & therefore it is conceyved that theyre customes then fayled—for cessante causa vel ratione legis, cessat lex

It is supposed that they were all formerly tenants at will till the 13th or 14th of Q. Eliz. for they cannot or will not shew any deed, graunt or copie before that tyme.

That there leasses should be good for 40 yeares more after theyre present terme, as all one as if they had a graunt for 80 yeares, w^{ch} (as is conceyved) theyre graunt will not amount unto

Lastly it is the opinion of many, that the Covenant for renewing theyre leasses was vacated by the purchase made by the City. And one reason may be, because the fynes due at the Princes death cannot be claymed by the City, & so a great part of the consideracon for that covenant is taken away

¹These 2 Lopps have in them about 980 tennants besides 95 freeholders.

The first sort hold (as is before) 15,599 acres, w^{ch} being all or the greatest part enclosed were valued at 6^s 8^d the acre.

The beastgates pasture being 7271 are valued at 4^s the gate for summering only

Besides they have vast & large commons & mounteynes w^{ch} they call theyre fells w^{ch} considering the quantity by the former survey are a full third part as good as theyre other grounds & enclosures, & at least are quoduple to them in number of acres, though farre short of theyre goodnes.

The mynes are taken of the King, since the Cities contract, by Humfry Wharton, receyvor here

The enclosures are most of them rich grounds & lye all in the dales encompassed wth mounteynes, moores and fells

The fynes post mortem, & alienacon would be demaunded of Sr George Vane, who hath receyved them of late yeares, notwithstanding Mr Sollicitors report to the Committee for the revenue that they were due to the City.

By the survey the lands are thus rated	The true value of them is
The best meadow at 5 ^s ye acre	16 ^s
The second sort at 2 ^s 6 ^d ,, ,,	12 ^s
The beast gates at 4 ^s	6 ^s 8 ^d

And according to these rates it is conceyved the Surveyors made theyre Improvem^t of every particuler in the two Lordships

[p. 39

The severall tenants of these two Mannors in these divisions being in number 962, have tyme out of mind (as is in part touched before) challenged before the 14th yeare of Q. Elizabeth's raigne a Customary Estate in the nature of a Copiehold to them & theyre heyres in all theyre severall tenements yeilding theyre annuall rents and payeng for fyne a peny only at ye death or alienacon of Lord or Tennant. In w^{ch} 14th yeare that Custome was taken away, and leasses for 40 yeares (some under the Great Seale, others under the Exchequer Seale) were graunted to them respectively in maner & forme & under such clauses & condicons as are hereafter breifly explained viz. The Graunt is in consideracon of two yeares rent payd for a fyne. The Habendum is for 40 yeares. The rent dayes are at the feasts of the Annunciation of our Lady, & St. Michael the Arch Angell. The Tenants are to pay at the death of the Lord or Tenant, and at the renewing of theyre lease a double rent of the yearly value in the name of a fyne, & at every alienacon one yeares value or rent. The Tennants are to doe suit & service at Midleham, Bainbrigg, etc. according to the Custome. They likewise covenant eyther by themselves or other sufficient men to inhabite, occupie, & manure theyre severall tenements during the terme. Not to lett, sell, or alien theyre tenements or any part therof for any longer terme then theyre owne lives, & six yeares after theyre decease (if the terme of theyre lease doe so long continue) wthout the consent of the Cheife Steward, Auditor, Receyvor and Surveyor or any three of them, whereof the Steward to be one. They are likewise to doe all services for the Prince as in former tymes according to custome. They are likewise bound to repayre at theyre owne charge and so to leave the same at the end of theyre terme. They have liberty given them to take sufficient houseboot, hedgboot, fyreboot, ploughboot & cartboot to be spent on the premises only, and tymber for repayring theyre houses by assignement. There is likewise a graunt from the Queene in theyre leasses that the tenants & theyre eldest sons (surviving the terme of that lease) shall have new leasses under the same rents & covenants, & for the same terme, so long as the tenants shall observe the covenants accordingly. And lastly, there is a proviso, that if the rent be not payd wthin 40 dayes, the lease to be voyd.
